

Elon MUSK in Torrenostro - New civilizational system - Book analysis

What if the encounter between technology, the environment, governance, and consciousness became the true challenge of the twenty-first century? This is the question posed by Paul Elvere DELSART in his visionary work Elon MUSK in Torrenostro - New civilizational system, published in October 2025 by EL4DEV Editions. Between manifesto, philosophical novel, and futurist essay, this unique text proposes the birth of a new model of civilization, at the crossroads of science, philosophy, and poetry.

A fiction to think about the future

Social engineer, eco-entrepreneur, and creator of the participatory societal change program EL4DEV, Paul Elvere DELSART pursues his ambition here: to use social fiction as a catalyst for collective innovation.

The starting point of the story is simple, almost improbable: what if Elon MUSK were invited to co-create a civilization laboratory in a small Spanish town, Torreblanca, on the Mediterranean coast?

Around this idea revolves a gallery of characters; among them, Carmen ORTIZ and Laura BODIS, two lucid and passionate young women from Torreblanca who, on a terrace facing the sea, engage in long conversations about the vision of Henry HARPER, the author's fictional double.

Through their exchanges, Paul Elvere DELSART builds a broad reflection on the limits of progress, the regeneration of the Earth, and the possibility of a world governed by cooperation rather than competition.

Elon MUSK, symbol and mirror

Far from biography or criticism, Elon MUSK becomes here a symbolic figure. He embodies technological modernity, conquest, speed, and creative power. Facing him, Henry HARPER represents consciousness, mastery of time, the reforming spirit, symbiosis, and planetary balance.

Between them, DELSART imagines not rivalry but a civilizational dialogue; MUSK seeks to terraform Mars, while Harper wishes to re-terraform Earth. One builds rockets and cars, the other conceptualizes living ecosystems and a planetary model of governance. Their potential union becomes a metaphor for the reconciliation between science and wisdom.

Torrenostro, Mediterranean utopia

The choice of Torrenostro, a small tourist area on the Spanish coast and part of Torreblanca, Castellón, is not accidental. Torreblanca becomes the small laboratory town of a larger project, testing on Earth the principles of a new world.

From this concrete place, DELSART unfolds the components of his EL4DEV civilizational system:

- a participatory governance based on data and collective consciousness;
- an ecological currency, the GREEN COIN EL4DEV, measuring contribution to the common good;
- and a global network of cooperative intelligence, the BIG SMART DATA EL4DEV, conceived as a genuine planetary brain.

Each local city-state becomes a neuron of a global, self-regulated, transparent and ethical organism. A utopia?

Perhaps. But a methodical, pragmatic utopia, supported by cybernetic models, algorithms, and a systemic philosophy.

An economy of regeneration

DELSART also proposes a complete refoundation of the economy. With his GREEN COIN EL4DEV, value no longer arises from speculation but from real ecological and social impact.

The objective is to transform money into a tool for cooperation and planetary balance.

Here again, Elon MUSK appears as a symbolic partner; his technological infrastructure (Tesla, Starlink, X) could give shape to this living economy.

But beyond the entrepreneur, what emerges is the idea of a conscious economy, an economy where wealth is measured by contribution, not by profit.

The knighthood of modern times

As the chapters unfold, DELSART's discourse becomes increasingly mythical and moral. He invokes the figure of the modern knight, heir to the first Templars yet oriented toward peace, justice, and ecological regeneration.

This metaphor structures the narrative: MUSK becomes the technological knight, Harper the spiritual and organizational knight. Together, they symbolize the fusion of power and consciousness.

This planetary civil knighthood invites every citizen to become an actor of collective transformation, a soldier of peace rather than a passive consumer.

Between philosophy and engineering

Beneath its narrative appearance, this book is above all a systemic essay. DELSART sketches a civilizational architecture in which controlled technology, governance, and ethics unite to form a global and self-regulating organism.

His style, poetic and conceptual, brings reason and intuition, cybernetics and metaphysics, into dialogue. One can sense influences from Teilhard de Chardin, Buckminster Fuller, and Jacques Ellul, yet transposed into an accessible, meditative, often lyrical language.

A conscious utopia

This book is not a simple futuristic fiction; it is a civilizational manifesto.

Paul Elvere DELSART proposes going beyond capitalism and political fragmentation to establish a governance of the common good, distributed and self-regulated by collective consciousness.

The challenge is no longer to build machines but to relearn how to inhabit the world.

Elon MUSK thus becomes an archetype, a figure to whom one extends a hand; not to invest, but to imagine together a new humanity.

Conclusion, from conquest to regeneration

This book is a disconcerting and deeply inspiring work.

Through its hybrid form of novel, essay, and manifesto, Paul Elvere DELSART proposes a path: to unite the technology of the future with the poetry of life, conquest with regeneration.

Through the prism of an imaginary dialogue between two visionaries, he invites the reader to move beyond the borders of realism and to envision the world as a collective creation, a conscious, cooperative, and beautiful civilization.
